

EASY PEASY GREENY

ECO BLOGGER | SUSTAINABLE LIVING

About me

I'm Raakhee! I help busy mums to adopt sustainable living practices for their home and families without stress, overwhelm or judgement.

Judgement is something that is something I've seen quite a lot with sustainable living and I find this counter-productive. There are many barrier to sustainable living and I help to find solutions to these.

Sustainable living looks different for everyone and there is no 'perfect' way of doing it. I often refer to myself as an imperfect environmentalist.

Doing SOMETHING is always the better option.

About the blog

Started in January 2020, Easy Peasy Greeny is a blog where I write about lifestyle changes I am adopting for myself and my family to live more sustainably and be more conscious about the environmental impacts my choices have.

I'm always learning about sustainable living and talk about what I've learned, any ideas I have and encourage my readers to make small changes to their lifestyle across my blogs and my social media.

Something I always say is - Start small, do what you can, build from there

WHAT CAN I DO FOR YOU?

- Collaborative / Sponsored posts
- Product reviews
- Giveaways
- Days out, attractions

MIRROR NEWS TODAY

Hi Raakhee,

We've reached day 5 of The Big Plastic Count! A huge congratulations to everyone who has made it this far. Your dedication and effort has been truly remarkable and we're incredibly grateful for your participation!

Loads of you have been posting your progress on social media and sharing your experiences of tallying your plastic throughout the week. We've been thoroughly enjoying each and every post and it's been amazing to see support from Counters all over the UK, coming together to help make a meaningful impact in tackling the plastic waste problem.

As we head into the weekend, we wanted to highlight some of the inspiring posts we have seen - to show our appreciation and to motivate everyone to keep on counting!
